Interview Questions:

Introduce yourself and style of writing to readers.

Hello my name is Tamika Melvin-Williams and I have always liked to write ever since I was a child. I knew that I had a story to tell and writing helped me to escape the harsh realities that were going on in my home. My writing style is about real life situations and experiences that people can relate to. I lost many family members and friends to prison, violence, and substance abuse; therefore, writing is my way to deal with the hurt and pain of it all. Writing is basically my getaway from life's disappointments.

What inspired the title?

Life is what inspired my writing. Miles apart came from real life experiences and those I seen of others who were around me. I just put it all in a fictional sense and it became a story. I want my audience to see that your trials can be the strength to help you move forward and become successful in life.

Explain which story you enjoyed writing the most and why?

Miles Apart was fun for me to write because I felt people could identify and relate to what was going on in my characters life. When you go through so much pain in life it can either make you or break you. My life is what made me want to do and have better for my children. In 2009, I could have lost my life and the life of my children and it was then I said writing is my calling. My time being home and what experience at that time forced me to write my story and really strive to get it out.

To get your books into the hands of readers?

I think networking is the best way for me to get my books in the hands of readers. I think social networks, book festivals, blog radio, and meet and greet at bookstores are great ways to get your book out. I am willing to do what I can to get my books to readers because I know my story can and may help the next young woman.

What was one of the most memorable times in your life?

My first book with explicit language and set that my mom let me read was 'The Color Purple' and still remembering to this day how I really enjoyed reading that book. It was like you were there with Celie when she spoke of her experiences. I think that's when I knew I could really write.
